Shipbuilding Executive Admits He Hired Shearer to Go to Geneva.

NO RECORD OF AFFAIR

and the Payments to the "Observer" Were Made in Cash.

SENT THERE AS REPORTER

Senate Committee Hears Details of Employing the Self-Styled Expert.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—The hiring of William B. Shearer to report to the Geneva naval conference was more or less in the dark, the senate investigating committee learned today.

The shipbuilders never made a record of the employment of the "observer" and he was paid in cash, S. W. Wakeman, vice-president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, testified before the committee today. There was no written contract between them, the witness further re-tells why he was hired.

Wakeman was the first witness today in the investigation into the activities of Shearer, who has sued shipbuilders for $300,000, which he alleges is due him for services rendered at the Geneva naval conference.

The witness told the committee that Shearer was hired only to report events at the conference.

The Bethlehem Corporation official represented his company at the New York meeting at the time Shearer was engaged to go to the 1927 Geneva conference which broke up without an agreement on naval limitations.

Previous to this meeting, Wakeman testified, the three American shipbuilding concerns had employed Shearer for $7,500 to come to Washington and "write articles and make speeches to supplement the merchant marine program to the United States Shipping Board." That was in December, 1926, he said.

Asked why Shearer was engaged to go to Geneva, Wakeman replied: "For the purpose of reporting the events that happened there."

Tell of Verbal Contract.

Clinton L. Bardo, president of the New York Shipbuilding Company; F. P. Palen, vice-president of the New York News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, and Henry C. Hunter, counsel of the Council of American Shipbuilders, attended the conference which sent Shearer abroad.

Continuing, Wakeman said the agreement with Shearer was only verbal.

"Why wasn't it written?" Chairman Shortridge asked.

"It didn't come up," the witness replied, adding he had "full power" to make contracts for his company.

The shipbuilder said he had not discussed the Geneva naval conference with any of his associates in the Bethlehem company.

"I did not take it up with any of my people or with counsel," he explained. "I knew none of the American delegates."

"Of course, I was interested in the conference, although I didn't give it any particular thought," the witness said.

Pain Shearer in Cash.

Wakeman said his company paid Shearer in cash through Mr. Hunter. He added there was no record on the books of his company showing any payments to Shearer.

"Why?" inquired Senator Shortridge, Republican, California.

"Because it was a personal transaction of my own on behalf of my company. I didn't think anything about it."

The witness insisted Shearer was only to "observe" at Geneva.

"And you thought it was worth $300,000?" pursued Shortridge.

"Yes."

"Did you get his reports?"

Wakeman replied he had.

Hoped for an Agreement.

Then, speaking of the conference, he said:

"I hoped the powers would make some agreement whereby the question of this country being at war would be settled once and for all. I wasn't interested in the outcome except as it would affect some work our company was carrying on."

"And you believed it was worth $300,000 to be advised on the trend?"

"Yes."

"Was this man hired to use his influence on the conference?"

"Absolutely not."

"Was he not to be a spy or middleman?"

"Certainly not, and that wasn't discussed."

Shortridge asked if the witness did not know "responsible and reputable newspaper men would report that conference?"

"Yes," he replied.

"Then why did you spend $25,000 for another reporter?"

"I thought because of his knowledge of naval affairs he would look at this conference from another standpoint."

The Law Yields a Point to Famous Lovers.

PLAINVILLE, CONN., Sept. 23.—Florence Trumbull and John Coolidge, today's most famous lovers, nearly were arrested last night. They were "doing about fifty" in the private car of Governor Trumbull on the way to a reception at the Shutt Meadow Country Club in New Britain. John was driving. Neither noticed that a motorcycle policeman, Peter Cabelus, was pursuing them.

Finally, after a half-mile he caught up.

"Where do you think you're going—to a fire?" inquired Cabelus.

"I really didn't know we were going so fast," John exclaimed.

"Didn't you know it?" Cabelus asked Florence.

"No," she replied.

"Where's your license, young fellow?" John was asked.

John showed him his license and Cabelus looked surprised.

"Are you the ex-President's son?" he inquired.

"Yup," said young Coolidge.

Then Cabelus grinned.

"All right. Run along."

CAN SHOOT DUCKS TOMORROW

Federal Restrictions on Hunting Off at Midnight.

Ducks and geese will be the legitimate prey of the hunter after midnight tonight. The federal hunting season opens then and remains open until January 27. There was a mild rush for hunting licenses at the county clerk's office today.

There is a conflict between the state and federal duck hunting seasons. The season under state laws opened September 15 and remains open until April 30. Notwithstanding the state law, a hunter caught by a federal inspector shooting or in possession of wild ducks or geese outside the federal season is subject to prosecution.

The state-wide hunting and fishing license combined costs $2.50. A license for Jackson and adjoining counties costs $1. Fishing in Jackson County is permitted without a license. Sam J. Brosius, deputy county clerk, in charge of hunting and fishing licenses, said he had sold approximately 200 since the state season opened, September 15.

TO ARCTIC EXILE FOR SCIENCE

Eskimo Naturalist Will Spend Nine Months on a Lonely Isle.

(By the Associated Press.)

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Far up in the frigid Arctic, Nagorruk, said to be the only licensed Eskimo naturalist, has gone into exile for nine months in the interest of science.

In the long bleak winter Nagorruk will collect specimens of mammals and birds on tiny, precipitous King Island, eighty miles off the coast of Alaska, for the Chicago Academy of Science. Three-quarters of a mile long and half a mile wide, the isle is cut off from the mainland by ice nine months of the year, and is swept by blizzards and gales. A dozen hardy Eskimo families inhabit the island, hunting and fishing in winter and "vacationing" in summer in Alaska.

THE MUSICAL PROGRAM.

A half-hour's musical program was given while the guests assembled for the wedding. The "March Triumphal," by Grieg, the "Prelude to Lothengrin" and "Elise's Bridal Procession," both by Wagner, and the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria" were played on the church pipe organ by Prof. William C. Hammond of Mount Holyoke college, from which the bride was graduated a few years ago.

Just before the wedding march "Promise Me," by Reginald De Koven, was played by Professor Hammond and Emil Heilbringer, Hartford violinist, conductor of a hotel orchestra to the music of which Miss Trumbull often danced.

24 MILES AN HOUR BEST

F. C. LYNCH SAYS TESTS HAVE FIXED SAFEST TRAFFIC SPEED.

Cars Going Higher Rates, Advocated as a Solution, Require Greater Space, He Tells Engineers' Club.

There is a "golden mean" in traffic control, particularly as it applies to speed, as variable as the conditions that affect traffic, and failure to determine this important factor will result in turmoil and hazard to life.

That point was emphasized today by Frank C. Lynch, director of the Kansas City Safety Council, who found fault with the theory that great speed is needed in traffic operations on boulevards.

In a speech before the Engineers' Club at the Hotel President, Mr. Lynch said tests had shown that cars driven at rapid rates of speed contributed as much to traffic tie-ups as did slow moving vehicles. Although the speeding cars move over the boulevards faster, they require twice as much in which to operate as do cars moving at a normal speed, he said. It had been found that a 24-mile an hour rate was the most desirable to assure regularity and precision in operation.

The same principle of even speed applied to other thoroughfares in ratio, to conditions as they differed from those on boulevards, Mr. Lynch asserted.

The principle end to be sought in traffic regulation today is capacity, the smoothest operation of a maximum flow of vehicles, Mr. Lynch said. And that involves consideration of traffic regulation as the determining factor in fatalities, he added.

Fast Growing Kansas City As Seen by Our Civic Leaders

WHAT THE PRESIDENT OF THE KANSAS CITY POWER &amp; LIGHT COMPANY SAYS:

While on a trip through the northern and eastern sections of our country, I took occasion to observe the conditions of the cities as well as the country through which I passed, and on the whole, I feel that Kansas City has many advantages to support her in her endeavors to make progress.

I feel that we have made great progress in the past ten or twelve years and that it is only necessary for the property owners of this city to have faith in their own property and community and develop their property in a proper manner. This city is bound to progress and the rapidity of this progress will depend entirely upon the owners of the property. There is every indication that investments safely made in this city will be profitable.

MR. HOOVER IS VICTIMIZED BY CONVERSATIONAL PESTS

By the Intricacy of Geometrical Scrawls on His Desk Pad One May Gauge "Boring" Capacity of His Visitors; Yet President's Health Has Improved.

On his desk was a telephone, a glass vase with flowers in it, a box of cigars, and a pad of paper heavily and intricately covered with geometrical and conventional circular designs, truncated cones, an imperfect sort of rhomboid and many, many circles, patiently divided into quadrants and smaller sectors seemed to predominate.

RISES BEFORE SEVEN.

The signs were plain and clear. This pad was convincing circumstantial evidence that the President had been receiving one of those village pests known variously by the official Washington secretaries as "gypsy moths" or "ball weevils." They put a blight on the rose leaves on which the official great are supposed to recline. This one, responsible for all the involved designs, has a sort of fame or notoriety in Washington for his lack of terminal facilities; he has no more than a scenic railway. His mind and his conversation just go round and round.

A NECESSARY BURDEN.

Mr. Hoover suffers these foils not gladly but stoically; there may be a grain of wheat among all the chaff. He lets them talk while he looks fixedly in a patient silence, writes Edward G. Lowry in the Saturday Evening Post. Meantime, without seeming to know what he is doing, he fills pages of white paper with involved and intricate designs of curves and angles and circles. His secretaries have besought him to turn these time eaters adrift without hearing, but he has always declined. "People have a right to call on me, and I have no right to be impatient," he tells his staff. "I am a public servant. This is a public office. If people are interested and if there is reasonable presumption of their having something to contribute, they should have a hearing."

A KING HAD IT RIGHT.

The ancient king who cried out, "Wouldst thou be the slave of slaves? Then be a king" knew what he was talking about. The President is one of the most powerful of rulers, yet all his working hours are ordered for him by a systematic compulsion of public duty and public demand. The compensations of the presidency are elsewhere than at the chief magistrate's desk. If it wasn't for the not a small clique of favorites, and the group is not permanent, but shifts from day to day. When I learned that some two hundred men had participated in the game during April, May and June I tried to find out the names of fifty of them, but discovered, to my astonishment, that no record had been kept of all the casual players.

My intelligence section reports that some of those who play like the great power, the great prestige, and the large opportunities for service and lasting fame offered by the office, the President would have one of the worst jobs in the world. All the honor and glory is paid for in hard, dreary work and incessant demands that sap at his strength and time.

RISES BEFORE SEVEN.

Mr. Hoover usually gets up about ten minutes of seven. Twenty minutes later he is in running trunks, gray woolen shirt, old trousers and rubber-soled shoes, and is out on the south lawn to join about a dozen friends at a game of volley ball on the two courts that have been laid out for him there. These men usually include Mr. Lawrence Richey, his personal secretary for twelve years past, and Commander Joel T. Boone, his official physician; but the others vary from day to day, so that during the first three months probably 200 different men have shared this presidential recreation. Immediately the game is in full swing, with two or sometimes three men on a side. With a 6-pound ball this is lively work, and for anyone not in first rate physical condition it is breath-taking. The play goes fast and furious for twenty minutes. Then a sweater goes on over the gray shirt and a coat over that. The party adjourns to a table under the trees, where orange juice and coffee are served during the cool-off process. This takes fifteen or twenty minutes.

At this point we may halt the march of this narrative for a moment to puncture a myth. There is no such thing as a volley ball cabinet. The men who share the President's early morning recreation are

Mr. Hoover's sleeping habits are almost his only habits that have been affected by the move to the White House, except for the recently acquired practice of regular exercise. During nearly all the preceding years of his manhood he has devoted one or two hours after midnight to reading before going to sleep. Since entering the White House this habit has been changed, probably due to the systematic physical exercise he now takes in the morning, which, added to the severe day's work, makes him ready for sleep by 10:30 at night.

His habit now, therefore, is to be asleep at about that time, but he wakes again at about 6:45 o'clock. The fact that his slumbers are broken in this way seems not to affect their recuperating quality.

game, and some of them like the publicity.

IS BETTER PHYSICALLY.

This regular morning exercise and the scientific regulation of his diet have done Mr. Hoover a world of good. The improvement in his physical condition has been noted by everyone who has been in contact with him through the past eight years in Washington. His medical advisers say that he weighed 190 pounds when he came into the White House and that he now weighs 185 pounds. The President himself says that he weighed 190 pounds when he was inaugurated and that he now weighs 187. Take your choice.

Whether he knows it or not, or whether he willed it or not, Mr. Hoover has been under close medical observation since he was elected last November. It is one of the things that happens to every President. In recent years there have always been two doctors in constant attendance. Mr. Hoover objects and submits, but had his way to the extent of fading out one of them. Now, there is only one. I have it on undisputed authority that at the present time Mr. Hoover is the healthiest man who has been in the White House in several years.

READY AFTER MIDNIGHT.

Mr. Hoover's sleeping habits are almost his only habits that have been affected by the move to the White House, except for the recently acquired practice of regular exercise. During nearly all the preceding years of his manhood he has devoted one or two hours after midnight to reading before going to sleep. Since entering the White House this habit has been changed, probably due to the systematic physical exercise he now takes in the morning, which, added to the severe day's work, makes him ready for sleep by 10:30 at night.

PLOT ENDS IN TWO DEATHS.

Mother and Daughter Kill Selves; Father and Son to Prison.

WABASH, IND., Sept. 23.—An arson and blackmail plot in which an entire family is alleged to have participated has culminated in the suicide of the mother and daughter and prison sentences for the father and son.

Mrs. Charles Keaffaber, 47, and her daughter, Helen, 24, were found dead in their farm home near Roann yesterday. They had taken poison. The daughter had confessed to county officers last week she was the writer of unsigned letters sent to several persons in this vicinity threatening destruction of their property unless restitution was made for fancied wrongs.

The husband and father of the son, Roy, 25, are held in jail here under prison sentences of one to ten years each. The father and son have pleaded guilty to setting fire to a sawmill at Akron, Ind., last month, and a farm building near here two years ago. Officers had planned to remove the father to prison and the

The Shadow-Children Learn About the Dead Sea

WHAT!" exclaimed Mij, "do we have to ride on these?" These, if you must know, were small donkeys, not much higher than tall dogs. Each one carried a saddle, with stirrups and reins, just like a riding horse. That's what prompted Mij to exclaim as he did.

Mij, Flor, Hand, Yam and Knarf—the five little shadow-children with the turned-about names—were going on a very strange adventure. They were going with their little masters and mistresses, the real-children, for a swim in the Dead Sea.

The Dead Sea! Do you know where it is? It is near far-off Jerusalem. The Dead Sea is the most curious sea in the world, for it is in a deep, deep hollow, hundreds of feet below where seas are ordinarily found.

Well, the real-children were helped onto the donkeys by their father and the shadows jumped on behind them. They never failed to go along with the real-children on occasions like this. It was a strange procession. There were the small, slow-moving donkeys and the Arabs who ran alongside them, prodding them with a short stick to make them move faster, and finally the real-children and the shadows, delighted to find how easy it was to ride on the donkeys back.

They hadn't gone very far before Yam turned to Knarf, who was riding on the donkey next to her, and said: "Why is it called the Dead Sea?"

"Because—" said he, pretending he had forgotten the reason though he really never knew it, "because—" Fortunately for him his master, Frank, at this moment asked his father the same question. "It's called the Dead Sea," father replied, "because there's nothing alive in it. Not a single fish, or insect, or bug can be found in it."

"That's exactly what I was going to say," Knarf declared triumphantly to Yam. Of course, none of the real children heard him. They never heard their shadows, just as you very likely never heard your shadow.

"Why is it that nothing can live in the Dead Sea?" inquired Dinah, Hand's mistress.

"Because it's so terribly salty," father answered.

"Is it saltier than salted peanuts?" Mij demanded in a loud voice.

"It has become salty," father went on without heeding the shadow-boy, for this reason. The River Jordan empties into it, carrying with it a little salt. It's hardly enough to taste but still it's there. There are no outlets to the Dead Sea. All the water that comes in must stay in."

"Then why doesn't it overflow?" Frank interrupted.

"I was just about to tell you. It doesn't overflow because the sun evaporates the water as fast as it comes in. But this is the curious thing: the sun evaporates only the water and leaves the salt, so that little by little the water in the Dead Sea becomes saltier and saltier until now, after many thousand years, it is the saltiest sea in the world."

All the while father was talking, the road they were on led down, down between great barren hills. It had suddenly become exceedingly hot and stuffy, and their air felt thickish, like warm water. There was not a single green thing in sight, not a tree, not a shrub, nor even a single blade of grass. Everything was dead.

All at once father shouted: "Look!" Real-children and shadow-children followed his finger and saw what seemed to be a large green lake, deep down in the lowest hollow among the hills.

"It's the Dead Sea!" he said.

TWO SISTERS WITH "IT"

CONSTANCE AND JOAN BENNETT ARE CAPTURING HOLLYWOOD.

The Former, With Her Veneer of Sheer "Class," Has Quite an Advantage Over the Vill- lage Beauties.

BY MOLLIE MERRICK, HOLLYWOOD, CAL., Sept. 23.—Two Bennett beauties now florify the local screen and give movie charmers a run for their money with the colony's bachelors.

Constance and Joan Bennett are leading lights among the newer importations. They are as blonde as Hollywood ever dared to be—but with a difference. They bring a tradition of the stage, however brief, for both are scarcely out of their teens and Constance displays a veneer of continental living which just isn't found among most of the village belles.

Constance returns to the screen which she left some time back to become Mrs. Philip Plant, Jr. She bought the conventional pearls, traveled on the usual yachts, dined in the usual Riviera haunts and completed the circle by the usual divorce—fully press-agented.

The first vehicle for her audible career is therefore the story of a very, very, very rich girl who has much, too much, of everything in this world, including gentlemen who are mad about her. Persistent efforts on her part to be poor, while wearing tons of Alencon lace, genuine diamond circles in her chapeaux, a good six inches of assorted bracelets of first-water stones, the above-mentioned pearls and the pelt of silver foxes—all come to naught.

She gets the very poor boy—stories are ending happily again this season—and remains the daughter of the very, very, very rich papa who has made all this Shenanigan possible.

I am not intending to throw obliquity on this story. It is entertaining in the extreme. Women will adore the latest in Paris frocks and lingerie, and men quite naturally will be lost in the charm display which is the blonde Miss Bennett.

If you want acting, there is Regis Toomey, that chap I hailed last January as a find. From the way he is taking the laurels in one picture and another, the prophecy wasn't far from wrong. He is at once lovable, genuine and pathetic in this new characterization. And he manages to drop down on a bench the first time he calls on the young lady and sing a very "sedimental" song—passably well.

The "sedimental" song just can't be escaped these days. Buddy Rogers sings in some of his newest films. Whenever you hear such dialogue as: "Young man, I think you're beginning to like me," you can be pretty sure the answer will be: "I'd like to see the chap who wouldn't fall in love with a girl like you." Which means that "A Girl Like You" or some like tune will be launched forthwith.

They get away with it fairly well. I'd hate to think of the chaos if all the writers in the country were suddenly forced to burst into song!

The village is enjoying a spell of news quiet. Aside from the facts that: Merna Kennedy and James Hall are being watched for symptoms of their declaring a 3-day intention-to-wed, which is a custom of this part of the country; crowds forming before a village show-place to watch Joan Crawford impress her hand and footprints in wet cement; Lindbergh turned down this honor, although a man trailed him with a tray of moist mortar and sand for an entire day—he also turned down our offers of screen fame; Carmel Myers and her husband entertain Max Steuer, famous $500-a-minute attorney; this place is full of $500-a-year directors.

KILLED ON CURVED BRIDGE.

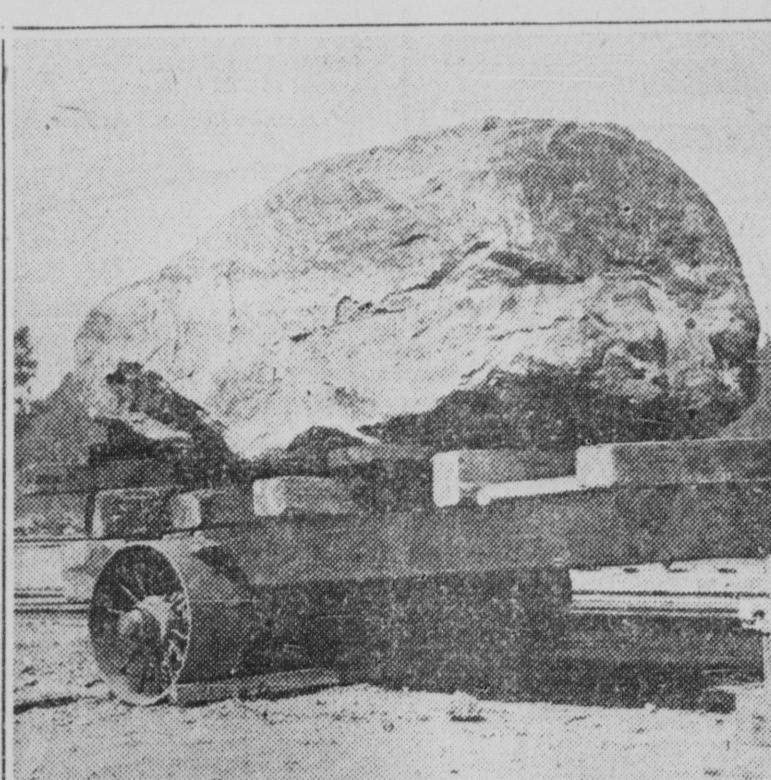

Another is Injured. Probably Fa- tally in Fisk, Mo., Crash.

(By The Star's Own Service.)

POPLAR BLUFF, Mo., Sept. 23.—Earl Craig, 32, son of W. L. Craig, undertaker of Malden, Mo., was killed; Sidney Billingsby, 26, of Rulesville, Miss., was injured, perhaps fatally, and Walter Bredenstein, 28, son of L. B. Bredenstein, a baker of Malden, was injured slightly, when their car crashed into the side of a bridge over the St. Francis River at Fisk, this country, early today.

The St. Francis River bridge, which is to be replaced with a new structure, has a curve near the center. The motorist was driving fast, according to witnesses, and crashed into the side of the structure and turned over. Billingsby and Bredenstein are in the Brandon hospital here.

LIGHTS IN 1,200 SHADES

A 3-DIMENSION SYSTEM FOR COLOR ANNOUNCED BY ENGINEER.

The Arrangement Will Change Illumination of Theaters, Buildings and Towers and Auditoriums, Inventor Says.

(By the Associated Press.)

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 23.—The development of a 3-dimension system of decorative lighting, said to produce more than 1,200 colors and shades of the spectrum, was announced here today by F. J. Cadenas, illuminating engineer of the national lamp works division of the General Electric Company, in a demonstration at the annual convention of the Illuminating Engineering Society.

The 3-dimension principle is accomplished by an arrangement of coves and flutes, with lamps and color media arranged so as to give different color and shade effects. First public demonstration will be made next month in New York at the National Electrical Exposition.

Mr. Cadenas said with this system the use of only three primary colors—clear red, green and blue—would produce shades of gray, orange, black and white, yellow, purple and cerise, and the pastel shades of red, blue, green, yellow and purple. The shade, he explained, depended on the wattage for each primary color and also on the location of each lamp. The design effects depend on the relative position of the coves and flutes to one another.

The new system required more than two years of research before being perfected, Mr. Cadenas said. He predicted the new mode of decorative color lighting would revolutionize present systems of both interior and exterior lighting effects for theaters, office buildings, tower illumination and flood lighting. Interior lighting of ballrooms, lobbies and auditoriums.

The effects of the Aurora Borealis.

The success of the whole system according to Mr. Cadenas, depends on the effects produced by the variations in amount of different colors and on the exclusion of all natural and extraneous light.

HAVE WOMEN NO PLACE SINCE THEY LEFT THE HOME?

Desire for Feminine Self-Expression Makes Decorators, Bankers and Politicians, but No One to Understand.

SELF-EMANCIPATION was the cry of thirty years ago. Self-expression is woman's cry today. Truly, in every sense, are we emancipated, emancipated from the conventional restrictions imposed upon our grandmothers, emancipated from the cares of housework, from the domestic worries which even great wealth and vast establishments entailed, emancipated from the excessive bearing of children, emancipated politically, emancipated in our dress and our speech, says Lydia Chapin Kirk in Vogue. We have the vote, we have all the liberty that it is possible to obtain; and, yet, the great majority of well-to-do young women of our time are restless, frantic almost, in their search for self-expression. They leave their homes and rush out into decorators' shops, where they make slip-covers for other women's hats, into the hat shops, where they fit hats on other women's heads, into studios, into offices, into banks, here, there, and everywhere, and, after business hours, still in the name of self-expression, they meet to make rash attempts on other women's husbands.

Women Have No Influence.
For generations, the American woman has been looked upon by her sisters as the most fortunate of creatures, a goddess at whose feet the men laid the fruits of their labors, at whose shrine they worshipped loud and long, a free, happy being. Actually, the American woman has not a quarter of the influence that the most downtrodden French bourgeoisie possesses over her menfolk. The alcôve sitting in her boudoir by the fireside is a more powerful factor in the family life than any jazz-idol grandmother, and self-expression is a phrase unknown in a country where great ladies receive on the first and third Wednesdays of the month, where politics and the arts meet over a cup of tea, and treaties and laws, poems and novels are made and unmade in an afternoon. If tired business men exist in France, they take their fatigue to a revue for relaxation, or, if they bring it home, they discuss their affairs with their wives, considering them as business partners rather than mere consumers.

If this is true in France, it is also true in England, even in that country where men are supposed to be the lords of creation and a half-dozen sisters hover anxiously about the heir to every dukedom—even there, where a man strides across a ballroom, his wife following after like a dog at its keeper's heels, even there, women have twice as much real influence in both national and local matters as our own can ever hope for. A Frenchman never talks down to a woman, an Englishman pays her the compliment of putting her on a soapbox to drum up a lost constituency, of riding hard with her across rough going on a bleak November morning, and, in the persons of Elizabeth and Victoria, even of crowning her queen.

American Women Get Few Secrets.

The average American thinks so little of his wife that he will share nothing of his business with her except.

TRY TO UNDERSTAND.

Suppose, instead of setting forth each day to design a morning room or sit at a meeting, a certain number of us stayed in our own houses and followed up the education to which we paid such scant attention. And suppose, instead of self-expression, we cultivated the neglected art of understanding. It is a feminine art, altogether appealing, altogether charming, if properly done, but it is an art that requires intelligence and endless study. It is far easier to hang one's hat on a peg every morning than to remain at home and learn to be witty and sympathetic. Yet, in the end, if more women renounced the glittering fallacy of self-expression, we are persuaded that they would find themselves expressing far more often and far more usefully than they had ever dreamed of before.

We do not speak here of the few whose talents give them a natural self-expression, which we would be the last to deny them, nor do we speak of the young women whose economic needs require them to find employment that will supplement the family income. Rather do we speak of the average, those who register themselves on voting lists as housewives, but who go forth each morning, booted and spurred, with a mad craving for excitement and adventure.

To them, ere it be too late, may we offer a timid suggestion that, after all, their place may still be in the home?

THE SWEDISH SKIN TO REDUCE.
Women of the North Find Such Exercise Better Than Dieting.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Skiing and skating are unequalled as reducers, in the opinion of Mrs. Alice Jeansson, who introduced the budget system to Sweden.

She thinks we have some good ideas on diet and budgeting, but that Swedish women have solved the problem of overweight better than Americans. The Swedish woman who skates herself taking on too many pounds slips on a pair of skis or skates, says Mrs. Jeansson. She goes skating over the hills and ponds and so, half a pound a week melts away without the ill effects which come from too rigorous dieting.

For trimmed suits and hats are something more than a fall possibility. Calf is among the trimmings approved for hat trimmings.

SUEDE LEADS FOR FALL

DULL KID AND LIZARD COME NEXT IN FAVOR AMONG SHOE FABRICS.

Purple and Red Tones Appear for Afternoon, White Evening Mode Sponsors Pastel Shades.

An exciting adventure is in store for the seeker after new footgear this season. Although the best shoes are quietly inconspicuous there is an originality shown in the details that removes any possibility of tedium from the tour of inspection in the kingdom of shoes.

There are many suede shoes shown and from all appearances this impractical fabric will be considered first in the fashion field. The dull kids and reptile leathers of which the lizard is a survivor continue to be favored. Beside the classic black and brown and the near-classic blue, an unprecedented number of green shoes are being displayed, and a few fearless dealers in shoes are brightening their windows with shoes of a deep purple shade and with a gorgous dark red called chianti.

The serious inroad that the various fabrics is making in the field of accessories is eloquently exemplified in the fall world of evening shoes. There are more, crepe de chine, soft Persian satin, lame, in colors refreshingly new and daring. These fabrics have the advantage that they can be dyed to match the evening dress. In most cases the straps and trimmings are of gold or silver kid, or, more likely, of narrow strips of the two combined. Little crystal or rhinestone buttons bejewel these slippers, giving the whole a certain midas magnificence.

Delicate pastel shades of suede, too, find a graceful expression in slippers for evening costumes—wild rose pink, etched in gold fashions a particularly dainty slipper. Silver stitching adds charm to many silver kid and light blue moire slippers. Cousins shows an unusual version in a lemon-yellow crepe with a delicate design in gold stitching. For the ever-chic and ever-sophisticated evening frock in black, no slipper is more distinguished than a dull black satin pump envelope by fine applique in silver kid, a graceful narrow strap in black and silver and a silver kid heel that Frank is sure.

Designers seem to have let their imaginations run riot in the matter of combining leathers for afternoon wear. One very new pump is of lizard with patent leather set on the toe in the zigzag that appears, with variations, everywhere in town.

Another diverting opera pump hopefully offered in bright green suede has two tiers of narrow scalloped kid in darker shades running all around the top. One of the most perfect selections for fall footwear is the severely plain graceful pump with no ornament, but developed in black moire or dull kid. For wear with dark blue costumes pumps of dark blue kid with blue lizard trimming are particularly smart. A perfect complement for the dark brown costume and brown furs is a pump of tete de nègre brown suede created by Henning.

For walking and sports the welt shoe continues to be important and there are smart walking shoes of brown suede with a 2-inch leather heel. Another welt is developed in lizard and ties with the inevitable four eyelets. The solid leather heel is the correct heel for a shoe to be used for walking.

A CHILD QUICKLY ADOPTS HIS PARENTS' BELIEFS

By ANGELO PATRIL

Don't try to teach your child something that you do not believe. It cannot be done. Remember, "What you are thunders so loud in his ears that he cannot hear what you say." In very clear words—you cannot hide your thoughts from the children, and it would seem that a secret thought had greater power than an openly expressed one.

When you listen to a child's complaint against his teacher you whole heartedly cry out against the imposition of the injustice, the tyranny of that dreadful person, it is idle for you to say, "Well, you just go along and do your very best. You'll find she'll change toward you."

That youngster, watching your eyes, tracing every flicker of emotion that crosses your face, knows what you think, knows that you are inwardly weeping over his suffering spirit and goes forth comforted and strengthened against the teacher. He may be right, but he is usually wrong.

If you listen with interest but with suspended judgment, your mind free to catch the implications of his every word, and then say, believing, "Well, I tell you what I'll do. I'll invite Miss Pepper to have afternoon tea with us and when she is here we can talk the matter over. I imagine we can find a way to make things smoother."

He will go out with a different attitude. If he is right and the teacher wrong, he will have courage in the thought that relief is in sight, but he will not do anything to bring on more trouble. He will walk carefully and avoid making any cause that will injure him.

And if he is wrong and the teacher right, he will walk very softly and do all he can to let the teacher understand that she was mistaken in thinking him a case for discipline.

Sometimes the doctor tells you to follow a certain course of diet, or routine, and because he is the doctor you agree, but deep down within you there is a stern protest. "You don't believe in it." Then don't do it. Either talk yourself into thorough agreement, or discard the idea. Faith is the basis of all good work, especially in our work with children.

It won't do a bit of good to send a child to church and Sunday school if you believe in neither. Nor will it help at all to lecture on the Golden Rule, the Ten Commandments, the ethics of life, unless you believe in them deep down.

Perhaps this is the reason why that child did not obey you. Perhaps this is the cause of your child's difficulties with the school, the church teacher, the health nurse, the old auntie, the newspaper man on the corner. Maybe you didn't believe what you said when you told that child to follow these lights because they were good? What do you believe? Whatever it is, the child is learning it.

JERSEY IN TWEED WEIGHT.

The Latest Product of Fabric Loom Is Very Soft and Light.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—Fabric manufacturers have begun to do the tricks with looms that the late Luther Burbank performed with vegetables and fruits.

The result is jerseys that look like tweed. Paris calls the new fabric jersey-tweed and uses it for light-weight wool dresses under tweed coats.

There are many fancy stitches used in the fabrication of the 1929 jerseys. They imitate various kinds of fancy woven woolens, lace, tulle and embroidery.

So light in weight are the new weaves that they can be used for turbans, scarves which are tied in bows under the chin, for dresses with wide cape collars, and full gathered skirts.

One of the best known dressmakers here is manufacturing jersey under her own name. She specializes in

TODAY'S CANNING SUGGESTION.

The Lengthened Silhouette Will Add a Centimeter, Says Designer.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—An internationally famous shot designer warns that heels are due for a rise as the result of longer, fuller dance dresses and the glorification of the tall, long-legged girl.

Big, flat feet sticking out beneath the new style dresses are death to chic as well as dance partners, according to this bottier.

He hopes to add another centimeter, he says, to heels that formerly were seven centimeters high. He cites three inches as the very minimum for a dance shoe, and finds four better.

SPORTING COMMENT

RAMBLING OVER THE SPORT FIELD.—NEW WORRIES FOR "ALBERT" ZWILLING.—THE COLONELS CAPTURED ONLY ONE BALL GAME AT MUEHLBACH FIELD THIS SEASON—TWENTY-OUT OF TWENTY-FOUR FOR THE BLUES ON THE SEASON—MURRAY AND DAY MOST EFFECTIVE AGAINST LOUISVILLE—BASEBALL BRIEFS.

By The Star's Sports Editor.

ALL IN THE DAY'S WORK: Jimmy LaCapra, manager of the Blas Rodriguez, Mexican lightweight, who meets Tommy Maroon in the New International arena's dedicatory show Thursday night, was on the "door" at a recent fight show at Juarez, Mexico. Rodriguez being on the "card".... "I never saw so many generals in all my life," says Jimmy. "They came in by the dozens, showing their badges and medals instead of tickets.... A Mexican cop threatened to arrest LaCapra because he wouldn't take Mexican money at the door.... You're not Americano now," said the officer: "you're Mexican, and I've got to jail if you don't let the kids in for that".... Jimmy let 'em in.... "Maybe you think Jimmy Carter, clown fighter who swapped gloves with Larry Cappo in the hall recently, is dumb, but you just don't know.... The morning after the fight there was a story in the morning edition of The Star about Gilbert Carter, University of Missouri golfing star, winning a tournament at Columbia.... 'Carter Wins a Thriller,' reads the headline.... "Gee, ain't that great," said Jimmy Carter, the fighter, as he scanned the top line of the head.... Soon Jimmy Carter had purchased a hundred copies of the morning edition of The Star and was sending that head out to various promoters of fights, making sure that his clipping disappeared out only the top line, "Carter Wins Thriller."

NOW IT'S AT THE PENNANT WORRIES OF Edward Harrison Zwilling, known variously as "Little Corporal," "Little Napoleon" and "Albert," are tucked under the sheets of security, our pennant-catching "Dutchman" just needs dig up other worries.

Without worries Al Zwilling would be unhappy, discontented. He won't be himself. He must have worries. In knowledge of that fact, the following worry suggestions are appended for Albert's approval or veto.

Whether Gerken will hit in the series.

Or Knothe will maintain his present batting pace.

As to the condition of Harry Riconda.

Will Tom Angley feel rested enough to catch a game.

And the weather which will affect the "gate," the major portion of which goes into the pockets of the players.

Bad hops.

The "voice" of the quartet. Kuehl, Wamby, Spurgeson, Knothe, Michaels, Grigsby, Gerken, Tucker, Nicholson, Peters, Angley, Thomas, Sheehan, Murray, Fette, Warmouth, Day and Davis.

THE Louisville Colonels had quite a time of it winning one ball game on Missouri soil this summer. That's all they did win—one.

Time was, and not so many years ago at that, when the Colonels were rabid poison to the Blues. Here and there Louisvillians were "tough." Most of the time they won. Of late, the tide has turned. In the 1928 campaign the Blues turned the tables on the Kentuckians. In the schedule recently closed between the two teams the Blues completed the table turning they started the year before.

In two of the three sets of games played at Muehlbach Field the Colonels were side-swiped in straight sets, four the first time, four the last. In between they got one victory in a series of six games. In Louisville the Blues outscored the Colonels, 55 to 52. In the same number of games here the Blues crossed the plate ninety-two times, while the Colonels were registering thirty-three. On the season—forty-eight games—the Blues scored 187 runs, the Colonels 85.

IT was on their second trip to Louisville that the Blues met with such determined resistance that they left with only an even break, two games and two. On the first trip there the "Little Corporal" and his men won four straight. They captured three out of four on their last visit. In the twenty-four games played in Louisville the Blues outscored the Colonels, 55 to 52. In the same number of games here the Blues crossed the plate ninety-two times, while the Colonels were registering thirty-three. On the season—forty-eight games—the Blues scored 187 runs, the Colonels 85.

GRESON, the right-hander of the Dazzy Vance sleeve dandings, is the Louisville hurler who holds credit for the single victory achieved over the Blues in Kansas City. Sheehan lost it. Doerry won two of the three games taken from the Blues on Kentucky soil. Wilkinson was the other winner. Sheehan, Thomas and Nelson each lost a game in Louisville.

Tincup was the major victim of the Blues, the Indian right-hander losing five decisions. Moss, the left-hander, lost three. The Blues twice defeated Weitzer and handed the same number of defeats to Williams, Deberry and Mapie. Wilkinson was handed one defeat.

MURRAY and Day were the triumphant Blue hurlers against the Colonels. Each has four victories over the Kentuckians, and each was impartial as to where they got them, two in Kentucky and two in Missouri.

Thomas thrice turned the Colonels back and two victories each belong to Fette, Davis, Sheehan and Warmouth. Nelson captured one game from the Colonels.

RANDOM SHOTS AT BASEBALL: The Chicago White Sox have made a better showing against the champion Athletics than any other of the A. L. competitors.... Twice this season Jack Quinn, the old-timer and spitball hurler of the A's, defeated the Yanks.... Bobby Quinn, president of the Boston Red Sox, hasn't much patience with the yelpers against the lively baseball. Bobby, contending that it's mostly punk pitching.... Sunday, September 1, nearly 20,000 fans clicked the turnstiles at Montreal.

STAGE TO THE HEAVIES

TWO BOUTS OVERSHADOW THE WEEK'S FISTIC CALENDAR.

Campolo Rules a Favorite Over Scott in Tonight's Bout and Sharkey Gets Betting Edge Over Loughran.

(By the Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Two tons of heavyweights will be on display at Ebbets Field and the Yankee Stadium during the next four days.

Starting with Vitorio Campolo's 10-round bout with Phil Scott, champion of England, at Ebbets Field tonight, the week's fistic calendar will bring together Tommy Loughran, erstwhile ruler of the light heavyweights, and Jack Sharkey of Boston in a 15-round bout at the Yankee Stadium Thursday night.

These two heavyweight shows have overshadowed the featherweight championship battle at Hartford tonight between Andre Routis of France and Bat Battalino.

Campolo, an untrained performer as yet, can punch with any of the current heavyweights. Largely because of the wallop in his right hand, he has been made a 7-5 favorite over Scott, one of the cleverest boxers in his division.

For no apparent reason, Sharkey has been made a slight favorite over Loughran in their Yankee Stadium tangle.

On the preliminary card is a 10-round bout between Jimmy Maloney, Boston, and Armand Emanuel, California, and another between Tom Heeney and George Hoffman of New York. Jack Gagnon, Boston, tangles with Lou Barba, New York, in a 6-round.

At Chicago Friday night, Tony Canzoneri, former featherweight champion, meets Eddie Mack of Denver in the feature 10-round bout; Benny Bass, Philadelphia junior lightweight, faces Johnny Datto, Cleveland, in the semiwindup.

As the time approaches for the formal presentation of the midget pair, wagers are even both feathers will be on their feet at the final bell. But, as to the decision, some followers see a victory for Rodriguez if he can keep his supposedly fragile chin out of Maroon's reach. A finer boxer than his rival, skillful afoot and an excellent ring general, Rodriguez must depend upon those qualities to win. Yet, whether or not he is equal to the assignment of keeping away from the vicious, 2-fisted mauler, remains for settlement. Once weakened, only defeat is seen for the Mexican. It is generally conceded he cannot beat Maroon in a slug fest.

Two of the four bouts on the card remain to be arranged. The sale of ringside seats has been delayed until Wednesday when workers finish the seat arrangements on the card.

The Blues of Other Days

Being a History of Kansas City's 45 Years of Baseball

CHAPTER IX.
FOLLOWING a year in the National League, Kansas City in 1887, found itself back in the American Association. But if it fared miserably in the major circuit, it did no better in the A. A. and the fall of the season found the Blues, or Cowboys, in seventh place. The final standings that year were as follows:

Long Better Than Wagner—Nichols

"They say Honus Wagner was the greatest of all shortstops," says Charley "Kid" Nichols, "but I disagree. I have seen Wagner and all the other great fielders of this position and none can compare with Long. He was a wonder."

Herman, Dutch as might be supposed by the name, was a shortstop fellow but quick as a cat. The stops he made were positively amazing. He had the faculty of being able to diagnose the situations so accurately seldom did a ball get past him. Seldom was he out of position. He fielded hits, back of third. There are modern shortstops who can do that, but Herman not only fielded the ball but threw out the runner. He went back of second and got his man.

The opposition seldom succeeded with the hit and run play because Herman would not leave his position to cover second when the runner on first was going down. He waited until the last possible second and then took the catcher's throw to second while on a run. If the ball was hit at his position and he had started for second he could reverse himself for starting speed.

An Idol With Kansas City Fans. Long became a baseball idol in Kansas City and when he went to the Boston Braves he played a part in one of baseball's greatest infields, an infield so superior fans used to enjoy watching its members practice before the game.

J. W. Speas was president of the Kansas City club in 1887 and Watkins the manager. Jimmy Manning was making his first appearance here and that season found him at second base.

The Blues lacked pitchers. Manager Watkins, at the end of the season, declared he would line his pitchers and go out in the brush for pitchers. Then "look out for the wild and wooly aggregation from Kansas City next year," he shouted.

Two Clubs Here in 1888. But in 1888 the Kansas City American Association team finished last while a new organization gotten together to play in the Western Association finished second to Des Moines. This situation was not entirely satisfactory so at the close of this season it was announced that in 1889 there would be only one professional team and that it would be composed of the best players of the two 1888 units. It would have good material and "gilt edged" financial backing."

President Speas represented Kansas City at a meeting in St. Louis and there Walton Holmes, who owned most of the stock in the Western Association team, agreed to join hands and play all future games at Exposition park. The members of the Western Association Blues who joined the American Association Cowboys

Mauretania Not Beaten Yet, Says Chief Engineer

Even though the newly built German liner has established a new Atlantic speed record which the Mauretania, former holder of the record, has not yet exceeded, England has not yet acknowledged that there is a liner superior to her own contender. Chief Engineer A. Cockburn, who drove the Mauretania on its recent runs during which it twice broke its own records, believes the "Grand Old Lady of the Atlantic" will come back into her own. Writing in Tit-Bits, London, he tells of the wonderful mechanism of the Mauretania which enables it to cross the Atlantic in less than five days, reaching a speed of thirty-two knots an hour, a rate unequaled by any other merchant vessel.

On my hundred and twelfth crossing of the North Atlantic as chief engineer of the most remarkable liner the world has ever known, she beat her own previous best record westbound by four and a half hours—quite a long time, when every minute is of first importance.

Eastbound from New York to Plymouth she also beat handsomely her previous records, making the crossing in 4 days 17 hours 49 minutes, at an average speed of 27.22 knots.

How is it done? By the team spirit the spirit which animates every one of the thousands responsible for the wonderful performance of a vessel that is twenty-two years old—the company that owns her, the firms who built and rejuvenated her, and the whole of the liner's personnel.

When the Mauretania is on passage she becomes literally a living thing, and necessarily the most living of all her parts is the immense engine room and the equally immense boiler rooms. Few people really know what they are, because so few ever see them, so I will try and help you to realize what the power department of the Mauretania is, and what it means to run such an express liner.

Let me make it clear that I am dealing with her normal performances, which are carried out simply because she is what she is, a creation so marvelous that what in other vessels might be phenomenal is to her a matter of course.

IN THE HEART OF THE OCEAN GATE.

The tour begins with an astonishing descent, deck after deck, then a long walk in a world of living steel, strangely and wonderfully fashioned, until we reach the starting platform, which is to the engineers what the bridge is to the navigating officers.

Here is what seems to the ordinary individual to be a hopelessly confused mass of levers, valves, wheels, discs, brilliant electric lamps, and mysterious devices and apparatus; but to the engine-room staff they are clear and understandable enough. What appear to be confused and bewildering sounds and roars are perfectly intelligible to the engineers of the watch, in their overalls and with spanners, micrometers, and whatever else they may need in the way of equipment.

Here is the very heart of the liner, and, like the human body, it is in constant and instant touch with the brain, which is the bridge. Roughly speaking, the bridge is nearly a hundred feet higher than the starting platform, and it is some hundreds of feet away; but by telephone and telegraph the officers of the watch send orders which reach the starting-plate form like a flash, and are instantly obeyed.

CARRIERS TWO CAPTAINS.

Bear in mind that the Mauretania carries two captains, and in all seven navigating officers of the highest professional attainments, and two chief engineers, under whom are some thirty other engineers and a very large staff to work the oil-fired boilers. And the ship is equipped with every known device for efficiency and safety.

Amongst the most wonderful of the devices are the steel doors, which, by the turn of handle on the bridge, close and convert the ship into a series of watertight compartments.

The stokehold is as impressive as the engine room. It is hot, of course—you cannot develop 70,000 horsepower and twenty-seven knots without heat, and plenty of it.

The oil-fired furnaces and boilers are in rows, lanes, little streets—call them what you will—and the stokers work with quiet grit. But hot though it is in the stokehold, the Mauretania is far cooler, cleaner, and better than when she burnt vast quantities of coal, before she was reconditioned.

Here is developed the power that drives the monster turbines—and you can tell how smoothly they turn the huge propellers nearly four times a second by placing your hand on the propeller shafts. They scarcely seem to be in motion.

Now come along and listen.

"ALWAYS ON DUTY."

What is this, to the unaccustomed ear, terrific noise outside? A beating, bashing, thudding, crashing, churning; in fact, a combination of sounds you would get nowhere else, and of which not a sign is conveyed to the passengers far above.

It is one of the wing propellers, one of the four manganese bronze screws, and, like the other three, it is doing its work as if it knew that it cost some $100,000 to be cast from that valuable metal.

This is a mere glimpse at the power department of the Mauretania and the engine room crew. That crew is in the charge of the chief engineer, who stands on watch and who is solely responsible for the engines. Having no special time for duty, he is always on duty, like the captain.

The engine room crew work in three watches, four hours on and eight hours off. The watch-keeping engineers keep their watch in the engine and boiler rooms, with extra watch during foggy weather, called the "Stand-by." This means that one watch stand by the starting and reversing levers, ready to carry out orders instantly.

THOUGHT SHE HAD A "DATE."

Girl, Interpreting Sign Language, Finds It Confusing.

From the New York World.

A girl student who thought that a young man was asking her to "come and see me at 2 o'clock" when he really was trying to convey the idea of "I have two legs" was an amusing incident in experiments of Dr. David Katz of Rostock, Germany, reported to the recent international congress of psychology at Yale university and intended to throw light on the psychological possibilities of the origin of language from gestures.

Dr. Katz's method was to have one student try to express some idea by gesture, pantomime, or mimicry. Another student watched and then tried to interpret the intended idea. Thus the 2-finger gesture of the young man was interpreted as 2 o'clock instead of two legs, while his downward hand motion to indicate the legs may have been interpreted, if the German co-eds have taken to petting, as an invitation to sit on his lap when the time of the imagined "date" arrived.

If human language actually did begin with gestures and if primitive men were no better at interpreting them than were Dr. Katz's students, cave life must have been filled with misunderstandings. The students found it difficult, Dr. Katz discovered, to distinguish by gesture between nouns and verbs, although that distinction may have been less important to primitive people than it is to day.

Simple adjectives like round or square, were easily distinguished, but abstract terms proved virtually impossible. Another serious difficulty of the gesture language was to distinguish between the past, present and future tenses of the verb; one point which supports the gesture idea of language origin, for historians of language believe that distinctions in tense were not possessed by the most primitive forms of speech.

See What They Get Now.

From Howe's Monthly.

The free mingling of boys and girls has some recommendation. In the old days young men thought of women as dainty creatures akin to angels, and were sorry disappointed after marrying one. . . . There is no illusion in the present sweaty, sunburned, bare-legged, half-dressed girls.

Man, the Martyr.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

Man is a strange animal. He suffers all day long swaddled in too many clothes and when he could be more comfortable at night about a bridge table he permits the scantly clad women to close all the windows and doors.

End of the Dance.

From the Arkansas Gazette.

The two additional verses of Home Sweet Home, recently discovered, came too late to do any good. The sole remaining use for the two we've always had is to end a dance.

The Indian Summer Picnic With Its "Indian Gift" of Gladness.

"Indian Gift" of Gladness

ALTHOUGH weiner roasts and marshmallow toasting parties are gradually taking the place of the picnic as Indian summer merges toward winter, a mere change of name does not change their nature. They're still picnics—or are supposed to be.

By making the picnic sandwiches the night before, the bread will dry out and curl nicely so that the picnickers can identify with a much greater degree of facility the various kinds of fillings. Even though a primary purpose of a picnic is to afford a let-down from the restraints and the taboos of civilization which irk and encompass us, the practice of pawing over the flock of sandwiches and testing them out the way that mother makes her tentative samplings from the box of bon-bons is to be discouraged. There are other ways of indulging in primitive urges when the family takes its communion with Nature.

For instance, there will in all probability be a fat man lying in the grass near the woodland glade in the family which the family will select for its base of procedure. He too has approached Nature in order to seek the primroses. The children, bless their souls, will help him find it, if they find him before he sees them coming. Quite often he will be asleep and will not know of the family's arrival until Junior playfully jumps over him and his younger sister picnics part way over him.

THE SPONTANEOUS KIDDIES.

Strangely enough, he does not get up and go at once, for that would make it appear that he resented the intrusion, and it would appear rude. You see, the amenities and the restrictions of our modern life cling to him. It is hard to cast off all the repressed desires and complexes of RCA has set a new standard of radio enjoyment in the new Screen-Grid Radiolas! Designed and built by the same RCA engineers who developed the Screen-Grid Radiotrons and Screen-Grid Circuit, they are the sensation of the radio year.

Never before have radio instruments of so few tubes offered such marvelous, well-rounded tonal beauty—such astounding volume without distortion—such balanced reproduction of both high and low notes.

Radiolas 44 and 46 utilize only five tubes—yet give you the performance of sets employing a far greater number. Three of these tubes are the amazing Screen-Grid Radiotrons—an RCA achievement. Included also is a new power amplifying Radiotron capable of tremendous volume without distortion.

And there are other RCA refinements; for example, a two-in-one tuning and volume control performs both operations at the turn of the same dial; and a special "local and distance" switch enables you to step up the power for distant stations.

Radiola 44 (table model) is in a compact, two-tone walnut veneer cabinet of charming and graceful design. The console model, Radiola 46, makes use of the finest of all reproducers, the famous RCA Electro-Dynamic Speaker, an integral part of the assembly.

Visit your RCA dealer today. See and hear these marvelous Screen-Grid Radiolas—designed and built by the originators of the Screen-Grid Radiotron and the Screen-Grid Circuit.

In addition to Screen-Grid Radiolas there are eight other models of Radiolas and Radiola Phonograph combinations ranging in price from $54.00 to $690.00. Any of these instruments may be purchased through RCA Radiola dealers on the convenient RCA Time Payment Plan... making it possible for you to buy a superlatively fine instrument at a remarkably low price.

find that they need from twelve to thirty pairs a year.

WIDE RANGE IN DRESSES.

Similarly the range in the number of dresses is rather wide, from four to fourteen a year, and this range also does not primarily depend on salary. Neither does the annual amount spent appear to be entirely dependent on salary. The range is from $35 to $110 a year, but many girls earning $35 per week spend less than $100 yearly, while those earning $25 per week may spend well over $100. The controlling factor appears to be the amount spent for room and board. If this is small there is a larger release for all clothing expenditures and consequently the girl spends more on dresses.

Of the 300 girls who registered recently entered the business girls' clothing budget contest sponsored jointly by the Bowery Savings Bank and the Exposition of Women's Arts and Industries, of which Mrs. Oliver Harriman is chairman, Miss Adeline Evans Leiser, chairman of the competition. Thirteen educational institutions, seventy settlements and neighborhood houses, sixty-seven residences for women and 200 business organizations co-operated in the contest, which closed on Friday, September 20.

Any young business girl in this city who felt she had worked out her clothing problems in such a way that it might be of help to other girls struggling with the same problem could enter the competition and try to win the $50 grand prize or the $25 first prize in each salary group.

STOCKINGS MAIN ITEM.

The budgets received showed an interesting range of expenditures on the part of girls earning from $15 to $19 per week, $20 to $24, $25 to $30 and $30 to $35. Stockings, according to Miss Leiser, seem to be practically the most important item in a girl's expenditures. An analysis of the stocking expenditure for a year shows that the range in number of pairs is great and has almost nothing to do with the amount of salary a girl received.

Thus one girl earning $15 a week submitted a budget in which she showed that she purchased fifty-two pairs of hose a year, while another girl earning $30 bought only ten pairs and one earning $35 bought only eight pairs. The majority of girls that two and two make four," said he, "On that with none I'll disagree. It has been often tested out."

"But 'two and two' is not so. The only way that 'four' is."

"This 'four' is still in other ways made, When one is in fractions, small complete."

Can find precision to a shade.

And 'three and one' will give to you as true as 'four' as 'two and two'."

Good Highway News.

It does not require a traffic expert to point out the exceedingly unsatisfactory condition which has developed in connection with the chief highway entrances to Kansas City from the east. Any motorist can demonstrate for himself the inconvenience and often actual peril involved in narrow roadways and inadequate underpasses at the very points where traffic must be unusually heavy.

The information contained in a recent letter from the chief engineer of the Missouri state highway commission, a resume of which has been published in The Star, is, therefore, both encouraging and valuable. It is encouraging because it shows how clearly the highway commission recognizes the existing condition and how it proposes to assist in remedying the evil.

The Frisco underpass on U. S. 50 is to be improved. U. S. 40 is to be widened from Thirty-first street perhaps as far as Grain Valley, a survey is to be made for widening Thirty-ninth street from U. S. 40 to Vineyard road. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the plan is the proposed connection from U. S. 40 to U. S. 50 through Eastwood Hills to Topping avenue, and then in on Fiftieth and Swope parkway.

This last project, which would afford a particularly handsome entrance to the city from U. S. 40, is contingent upon the improvement of Fiftieth street, now obstructed by the underpass and the "Toonerville" trolley. That is where the information is valuable, because the city must aid in this development. The engineer's letter offers strong corroboration as to the necessity for removing the trolley line, which now divides the two concrete ribbons that constitute Fiftieth street.

In this connection the chief engineer observes:

The state highway commission indicated its desire to aid this entrance in the Kansas City limits when it planned the new concrete underpass for this trolleyway, over which all of the highway traffic on U. S. 50 now moves between Topping avenue and Swope parkway. Unfortunately, these concrete slabs do not extend far enough to pass under the tracks, as stated above. I can see no satisfactory solution unless the trolley line is removed and the pavement is made between the tracks.

Obviously if the entrance for U. S. 50 as it stands is inadequate even for the traffic now flowing over that highway, there would be no point in bringing in additional traffic from U. S. 40. An ordinance has already been introduced in the council, providing for the removal of the trolley. It is essential that it be passed and the 20-foot right-of-way be turned over for widening Fiftieth street. That is the least Kansas City can do to assist the highway commission, which has been and is doing so much for the city.

If the commission carries out the plans indicated by its chief engineer, serious traffic problem will be vastly relieved.

So the Wedding Interests Us All.

The friendly interest that is being taken throughout the country in the marriage of John Coolidge and Florence Trumbull is due in part, of course, to their conspicuous position. The son of a President and the daughter of a governor are bound to be in the public eye.

But behind the interest in these young people is the background of a universal human experience. In every family the story of the wedding revives memories of stars anticipations. Reading of the preparations at Plainville, husbands and wives live over their own experiences. Fathers and mothers recall when their own sons and daughters left them to found homes of their own, or look forward to such events to come. Young people see in the event the culmination of their own romances.

In the wedding of John and Florence is dramatized one of the typical high moments of that human comedy—or in some instances human tragedy—in which we all are players and in which we all are vitally concerned.

No Trickery in the Amendment.

Senator Sheppard of Texas rises on the floor of the senate to deny certain statements attributed to him, together with implications therefrom, in the Collier's article about the origin of the eighteenth amendment. The article, extracts from which were reprinted in The Star Friday, was misleading in various particulars, he says, as to the circumstances under which the senate acted on the amendment resolution.

There are no evasions, tricks or subtleties in the amendment, its author affirms, nor was it the work of Wayne B. Wheeler or any other one man, but rather the outgrowth of public sentiment and "the deliberate consummation of an ideal." Regardless of the agreement with Boles Penrose that ratification must come within six years, the proposed amendment would have been acted upon sooner or later and would have received the necessary approval by the states without protracted delay.

That view of the matter is convincing. It is supported by facts. Prohibition sentiment had been growing for years. Its effective culmination was dependent neither upon the World War nor political agreement, although, as Senator Sheppard intimates, these might have expedited action. But since nearly three-fourths of the states already had adopted prohibition on their own account, or some modification of it, it was hardly a long chance as to what the states would do, once they were given the opportunity to move for a legal ban on liquor nationally.

There had been experiments with every other method of curbing, the evils of the liquor traffic. They had failed. National prohibition was inevitable. The exact time at which it came, together with the circumstances, was immaterial.

As to the amendment itself, it is free from trickery. The only people it has been instrumental in tricking have been the bootleggers and other violators of the laws. The courts have had no particular difficulty in interpreting the constitutional provision or the legislation enacted under it. With the law enforcement and observance which it demands, there will be no question about results.

Kansas City's Pennant Winners.

Here's to the Kansas City Blues! Here's to George Muehlebach, "Dutch" Zwilling, and each and every player in the winning team of the American Association! This aggregation of owner, manager, pitchers, fielders and batsmen has honored Kansas City with a season of driving, consistent baseball. The organization showed its strength and balance early in the 1929 trials, took a high place at the start and held it with little variation up to the pennant-winning hour.

While the victory was virtually won some time ago, there was a tough runner-up in the St. Paul team, which has kept its relative position for weeks with only the slightest variations in percentages from day to day. With such a team contesting the way, there was a chance for a different outlook if the Blues had gone into an unexpected slump for four or five games. But the Blues have not been in a slumping mood. They have played remarkable baseball. Their resourcefulness has been demonstrated when leading players have been disabled and the reserves have been called up. Manager Zwilling has demonstrated fine discernment in choosing his players and in handling them.

Kansas City now may look forward with elation to the little world series, with the Rochester team, the first four games of which will be played here. It has been six years since this city celebrated the winning of a pennant. The coming celebration should be the biggest, the most enthusiastic this city ever has put on, even though six times before in its baseball history such celebrations are recorded.

A Regular Cheer!

The football season approaches. The association which directs the athletic destinies of our alma mater gently reminds us of the fact by inclosing a sheaf of application blanks, together with a complicated set of instructions for their use. The schedule calls for eight games. We are informed that we may purchase a season ticket for $5. That sounds reasonable, until we discover (upon carefully reading both sides of this blank) that the "season" ticket will admit us to just four of those games. Each of the others requires a special ticket, and by an odd coincidence they happen to be the important games.

We examine the other blanks. They are in the form of envelopes, each of a different color. There is a pale lavender, a green, a pink and so on. We now find that of the four games not covered by the season ticket, three will cost us $4 each and the other $5. A little computation then discloses that the lowest possible charge for watching the eight games to be played by our alma mater (name supplied on request) is exactly $22, to which must be added five 20-cent fees "for registry." But $22 for one undergraduate's personal expenditure on football tickets. Ho for the great amateur, intercollegiate sport of football!

MOUNT PELEE AGAIN THREATENS POPULACE WHICH IS LURED BACK TO FERTILE LANDS

Shunned and Feared, Saint Pierre, Which Was Wiped Out in 1902, Remained a City of Desolation Until a Few Years Ago, When, in a Spirit of Audacity, It Began to Grow and Prosper, Only to Feel Again the Eternal Menace.

ON the island of Martinique, in the Caribbean, homeland of the Empress Josephine and colony of old France, life was expansive and gay among the Creoles. An extract from Vigny's "Servitude et Grandeur Militaires" thus describes the principal city of the island:

Saint Pierre has a magnificent theater, drama being the chief diversion of the French. It has four boxes, with a promenade strolling between the acts. At night, every street is lighted; persons of wealth, however, go about accompanied by servants bearing torches, and fashioned out of the gum tree, very resinous, which give out a pleasant odor when lighted.

So on through the decades, Creole life at Saint Pierre laughed and dreamed gaily; and, according to some standards, wickedly.

At about 7:45 o'clock in the morning of May 8, 1902, Mount Pelee suddenly blew up and wiped out the entire population. The city of 40,000 was buried under many feet of mud and ning water and a good sewage system. We have a daily steamer from Fort de France.

The visitor, however, could not restrain an apprehensive glance at the threatening mass of Mount Pelee, and the mayor, following his guest's eyes, read his thought. Mayor Ernoult, being a sugar planter at Parnassus on a spur of Mount Pelee, spoke as one who knew whereof he speaks.

"Bah!" he declared with a smile and a fatalistic shrug of his shoulders. "She will not gobble us up again in the same century, at any rate."

That was in 1923. Mount Pelee patiently waited for six years before making a return. A dispatch in The Star the other day tells of a rain of volcanic ash on the towns of Saint Pierre and Morné Rouge. This caused increased evacuation by the population of Saint Pierre, Morné Rouge and Precheur, but the countryside continued calm. No such disastrous eruption was expected as that of 1902, and go on scrubbing the kitchen floor.

A Riverside boy of 7, says the Wichita Eagle, who had disobeyed and was anticipating punishment, knew it was coming when his mother called him from play with a summary: "Come here, this minute."

Turning to his playmates he said: "There will now be a brief pause for station announcement."

"We're glad cooler weather has come, with the return of 'coats,'" confesses Lew Valentine in the Clay Center Times. "It gives us a pocket in which to stuff old letters instead of having them pile up on the desk."

Wendell Atherton, who has bought the La-Crosse Chieftain of Harry Fish is a capable young newspaper man who undoubtedly will provide his readers one of the most interesting weekly news papers of Western Kansas, says Frank Motz in the Hays News. Atherton has worked on the Salina Journal and Russell Record. Until recently he was a part owner of the Ellis Review-Headlight. He is a business-getter with a likeable personality and knows what it takes to publish a successful paper. He should do well at LaCrosse Harry Fish, who is retiring from the publishing business, said he planned to take a month's rest. Later, he added, he expected to re-engage in other business in his home town of LaCrosse.

THEIR BEING A DIFFERENCE.

If the editor of the Kansas and Mrs. Davies are able to go along at their present gait, as to health "and the pursuit of happiness," which now seems normal, until October 15, 1929, we shall celebrate our fifty years of holy wedlock. On the day of the wedding the charivari party demanded and received three 8-gallon kegs of lager beer—that part of the festivities a half century ago will not be repeated at the forthcoming event.—Gomer T. Davies in Concordia Kansas.

"Will the Associated Press correspondent at Colby please rush story?" asks the Coffeyville Journal, "on how the promoter is succeeding who bought all of Marion Tally's wheat and is offering it for sale at $1 a pound?"

SYNOPSIS.
Benny Darrell and his wife, Flo Sloane, are "roasters" who find their first Broadway engagement in musical comedy a failure. Flo seriously resents Benny's refusal to mourn over their bad luck. She announces that she is through.

CHAPTER II.—(Continued).
BENNY was not listening. He stood slumped forward, hands in the pockets of his green dressing-gown, his whole attitude expressive of dark despair. Suddenly the telephone rang. It did not move. It rang clamorously for several seconds. "The telephone's ringing," announced Peggy Page.

"There's a smart girl," nodded Lew to Benny. "She knows a telephone-bell when she hears one!"

"Oh, you go on!" countered Miss Page.

Quietly Benny picked up the telephone. "Hello? . . . Who? . . . Oh, hello, Mr. Hummel. . . ."

Lew and Peggy exchanged glances.

"Yeah, we're in. . . . All right."

"Sure," Benny put down the telephone. "It's B. B. Hummel."

"That big stiff!" commented Miss Page. "He was my agent once."

"He's everybody's agent," said Benny, "but don't always know it till somebody else gives 'em a job. Then Hummel comes in for per cent. Ya know what that bird per cent."

"I believe it," nodded Lew.

"He stands in his window, an' if he sees an actor goin' into a manager's office, he grabs the phone an' tells the manager he's givin' you over."

"Five per cent," was Lew's comment. "An' all he's got is a window."

"He's on his way over now," Benny lighted a cigarette nervously. "I know what he wants. He knows the show's a flop an' he's gonna offer me three days in some tank town after it closes. Wait'll Flo hears this—She'll blow up!"

"If that Turk's coming here," declared Miss Page. "I'm going to beat it." And she began to gather up her gloves, purse, lipstick and various other impedimenta.

"I don't live here neither," Lew arose to take his leave.

"He couldn't be bringing anything but bad news," muttered Benny.

Peggy took his hand. She always made a great point of being sincere. "G'by, Benny. Good-bye."

"Well, we'll say ya later, maybe," Benny smiled half-heartedly.

"One word of advice," Lew held open the door. "If B. B. Hummel's comin' up here—inside the radiator!"

They were gone. Benny heard Flo come out of the bedroom.

"Have those friends of yours left?"

He turned. She was dressed for the street. They walked right out on me." He smiled, with an effort. "Where ya goin'?"

"Out," said Flo.

"Out—where?"

"When I told you I was through I meant it."

"Ya mean—ya wants split?"

"Yes." She looked away.

"But ain't this all kinda sudden? I—"

"When you've made up your mind to do a thing the time to do it is now."

"Well—where's ya gonna do?"

"I'm going to get another partner."

A pause. Then he said huskily: "Ya think I'll never make the grade."

"It don't look like it to me. We've tried it together three years."

Benny stared down at the floor. "Well—I don't want stands in your way . . . ." He shifted on one foot uneasily. "I kind of kind of always thought we was—more to each other than just—dancin' partners. . . . I—I thought you loved me—up to this mornin' . . . . We—we been through worse times than this together—an' you never complained."

"Yes, I know." Flo's blue eyes were cloudy. "But—"

"Hard luck," went on Benny, "is supposed to bring people that love each other closer together. Why—ya used to laugh at all our troubles."

"You can't keep on laughing forever."

"Sure ya can!"

"That's just the trouble with you." Her voice sharpened. "You laugh at everything—an' leave me to do the worrying. That's why we're still where we were when I married you. No—there's only one way to get up in the world—and that's to go there. I've made up my mind."

A knock on the hall door. The middle-aged bell-boy came carrying a newspaper and a blue and white striped hatbox. "I got your order, Mrs. Darrell. An' this hat just come, O. O. D."

"Tell them to collect at the desk," said Flo.

"O. K." assented the bell-boy. "I couldn't find a notice of your show in here—he handed me the paper—but I see where the big fight's gonna be held in New York."

"Well? That's fine," Benny seemed disinterested. "Here." He handed him a tip.

"An' them other papers," the bell-boy reminded him, "was forty cents."

Once more Benny reached into his pocket. "Say, I got a new one for ya, Mr. Darrell—stop me if you've heard it."

"Yeh, I heard that one," said Benny. "Beides, I'm kinda busy." He gave the bell-boy a half-dollar.

"Sure—all right. Thanks." The bell-boy went out, closing the door.

Flo had taken off her little gray hat and removed the new blue one from its box. He watched her go into the bedroom and put on.

"Salomy," she called.

The bull pup scampered after her. Benny heard the harness being buckled on. Then Flo came out, with Salomy on a leash.

"I'll send for my trunk this afternoon—when I know where I'll be." She avoided his eyes.

"How about the show? It's sure to run a couple of weeks, anyhow."

"I'll be at the theater tonight."

"All right." He looked down at the bull pup. She beamed up at him, wagging her curly wisp of a tail frantically. "Ya takin' Salomy?"

"Why—yes."

He reached down and patted the dog's head. "Ya won't forget to feed her?"

"Certainly not."

"Well, I was only thinking—ya're not used to fixin' her food an' ya might forget it."

Benny licked his hand affectionately. "Ya can get those dog biscuits at most any deli—"

Flo turned away. "Yes, I know." Her voice sounded the least bit unsteady. She moved toward the door. "Good-bye."

Benny could not believe that it was really happening. His lips moved twice before he was able to speak. "G'by. . . ."

Then she went out. The door closed. The jingle of Salomy's harness died away down the hall.

He recognized her at once, and came to ward her with an easy smile.

He stood there, a sense of desolation engulfing him.

"I beg your pardon." He took off his hat. "I saw that his hair was fair, that he had a small mustache and beautiful teeth. There was nothing 'fresh' in his approach, she assured herself.

"I didn't know I had timed my arrival so accurately. I'm Alexander Winston," he said. "How do you do?" Flo smiled and gave him her hand. "I was just reading your letter. And thank you for these lovely flowers—orchids!" she corrected herself hastily. They were the first orchids she had ever received—but it was not like Flo to mention that fact.

"You're just on your way out."

His manner was so suavely familiar—it was as though he had known her for years. "My car is here. Can I take you any place?"

"Oh, thank you!" she appeared slightly flustered, as they walked across the lobby—"no—I was just—"

"Taking the dog for a little air," he suggested, smiling. They went out through the revolving door. "Perhaps we could have tea—"

"Oh, I'm afraid not," said Flo. "I—I have an errand to do."

"Then let me walk part way with you May 17?"

"Why, yes—sure."

He turned and spoke to the chauffeur, standing by the door of the car. Flo had never beheld such a gorgeous car. The chauffeur touched his cap. Then Alexander Winston fell into step beside her, and they strolled up toward Sixth Avenue. Out of the corner of his eye he glanced down at her. Prettier off-stage than on. Superb figure. . . .

"I hope," he said, "you won't mind my coming around this way. You see—I simply had to meet you."

Flo blushed. She was, of course, flattered that he had wanted to meet her. Yet she felt vaguely uneasy. Not quite sure of the proper procedure. Flo had never been a flirt. And after the scene she had just gone through with LeGrand.

"How are you?" LeGrand spoke huskily, cigar clamped between strong yellow teeth.

"Giadda meechu," said Benny quietly.

Without invitation, Hummel dragged forth a chair for LeGrand and one for himself. They did not remove their hats. LeGrand's crafty eyes roved around the room and discovered a framed photograph of Flo on the table. He peered at it intently for a few seconds, then sat down. Benny remained standing, his manner noticeably distract.

"Well," began the booking-agent brightly, "how's the little woman?"

"Mrs. Darrell?" said Benny. "She's all right."

"Great little girl," Hummel informed LeGrand. Then: "Well, Benny, what did I always tell ya?"

"I'll tell."

"Always kiddin'—ya know what I mean?"

Hummel grinned at LeGrand.

"Let's get down to business." The night-club proprietor removed his derby.

"Every time," nodded Hummel. "Well, Benny, Mr. LeGrand seen your show last night."

"Yeh?"

"He liked your act. He thinks Flo's great."

"Yeh?"

"He thinks you're good, too. He thinks you're a clever team—the two of ya together—ya know what I mean?"

LeGrand spoke, in his thick, hard voice: "It's the woman that counts in a dance team. The man's only a dummy."

Benny stared into space. "A dummy's right."

"Well, Benny," said Hummel briskly, "here's what I slipped over for ya. I seen ya was good—ya know what I mean?—an' I says to myself, 'B. B., grab 'em before the others know they're good.' An' what's the answer?"

"Who knows?" murmured Benny.

"Well—I got Gus, here, to make ya an offer!"

"I run into you on the street," LeGrand corrected him. "By accident."

"It looks like it, at that, don't it?" Hummel cracked his professional laugh. "But I was just on my way over to see ya, Gus—about these two. Here's an agent that never lays down on the job. Ya know what I mean?"

"Sure," said Benny. "Do you?"

"Well—Hummel twirled his bamboo cane—"whatta ya say, Benny? Great—eh?"

"Is it a secret?" inquired Benny.

"Don't mind him, Gus." Hummel grinned jovially. "He thinks with his feet. Like all hoofers."

LeGrand was glancing around the room.

"Where's—"

"Where's the little lady?" Hummel finished for him.

"Why—Benny swallowed—"she—she just stepped out."

"I'll give you five hundred a week," said LeGrand abruptly.

"Five hundred week! Half a grand!" Hummel leaned forward eagerly. "Is that an offer?"

Benny did not seem to hear.

"I am opening a new night-club—the most select in town," continued LeGrand. "I ain't got a name for it yet, but you can take it from me it will be an honor to work there."

"Didja hear that, Benny? How about a nice little contract?"

Benny stared at the floor. If only this offer had come yesterday. But now Flo was gone. It was too late. "I ain't interested," he said quietly.

Hummel bristled. "Whatta ya mean, y' ain't interested?"

"That's what I said."

"Now be sensible, Benny. Why, there's a lot of 'em' would give both feet t'dance at any of LeGrand's clubs. I can get a dozen teams in an hour—but I want ya to do good work. Ya know what I mean?"

Benny did not answer. He was not even looking at them. Hummel and LeGrand exchanged glances.

"Suppose I was to offer six hundred?" said LeGrand.

"Ja get that, Benny!" cried the booking-agent. "Six hundred a week—for workin' half an hour a night!"

"I told ya—I ain't interested."

"Ain't interested" grunted LeGrand. "Who d'you think you are—Paylava?"

"Why, kid, ya'll be the sensation of New York," wheedled Hummel. "Wait'll ye see this new club. I'll knock ya dizzy with mirrors! Ya can't get a table already—right this minute—an' the place ain't been opened yet. An' the patronage! All classe. Ya know what I mean? Why, before ya're there's gonna be all the swell's in town'll be wantin' to mecha."

"That's a lot of popcorn," muttered Benny. And—now she was gone . . . . But he couldn't tell them.

"I'll offer you seven-fifty—an' not a cent more I'm a sucker for doin' it." LeGrand stood up and clapped on his hat.

"Seven-fifty!" echoed Hummel. "Why, if ya was to read about it, ya wouldn't believe it! Ya could quote me—it's a wad of an offer. An' I wouldn't lie to ya, would I?"

A pause. Benny had not moved.

"Whatta ya say, Benny?"

"It's too late."

"Say—it's never too late t'take seven-fifty a week!"

"He must be crazy," grunted LeGrand.

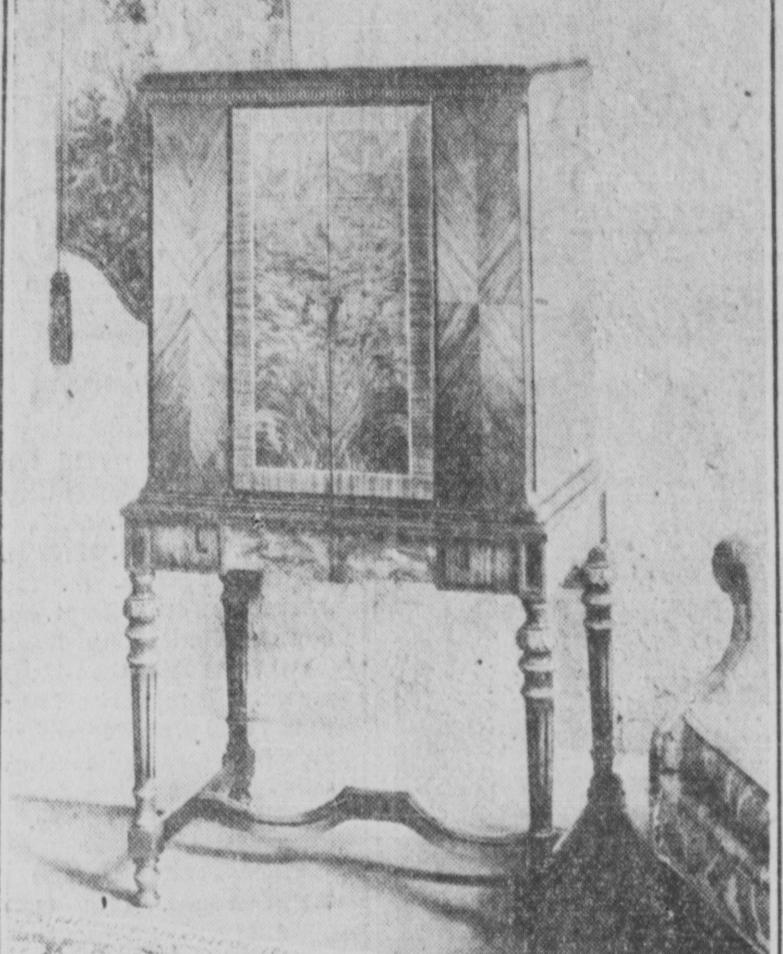

"Crazy? Worse'n that!" Hummel sprang to his feet. "Now, look here—"

"I told ya—it's too late." They could not see the suffering in Benny's eyes.

"Well—that settles it. We can't do any business."

"Wait a minute, Gus. Leave 'im ta me. There's somethin' the matter with this guy, an' I'm gonna find

The Chaperon

Questions on social customs, beauty aids and affairs that come up daily in the experience of busy people will receive prompt answers. Mondays from THE CHAPERON.

Dear Chaperon: What is your opinion of parents who will permit two daughters of 12 years of age, to play with boys continually, and who also permit them to call these boys on the telephone and invite them over to visit them?

My own opinion of this sort of thing is that parents of this type are inviting all sorts of trouble. There are parents who will deliberately permit girls of this age, truly little girls, to cultivate "boy friends," and girls, to absolutely so ignorant that it is a shame they have the exalted privilege to be someone's parents.

We are continually wondering what is the matter with the youth of today. It isn't always the fault of our young people, but the blame should be laid on parents who haven't the slightest conception of how to guide their sons through the formative years of their lives, and who deliberately set them out after the opposite sex.

A MOTHER: This depends entirely upon how the little girls behave with the boys and what the real object in asking in the parents over is.

If they act as girls older would act in fishing, for boy attentions, then of course the parents are wrong and to be censured.

But if the associations are merely childish ones, the parents are being very wise to give their children the opportunity to get used to having boys around, as a perfectly normal and natural thing in life. And to be congratulated upon being far-sighted enough to encourage them to have them around at home where the association can be normal and happy, with lots of wholesome fun. It's a good precedent to establish and is building for a future full of confidence and happiness and empty of the necessity of sneaking and conniving to have boy friends off somewhere from the safe and watchful eye of mother.

What's so scandalous in girls playing with boys, anyway, as long as that play is sane and normal? It's much better for girls to discover early that boys aren't romantic knights with budding halos they never could possess, but just jolly young chaperons; much better than to surround boys with so much mystery, unexplained, that girls are likely to romanticize and dramatize them into something to strive for and ferret out and have at all costs. Being accustomed to them and their well-known and perfectly natural clay feet will delete much sentimentality in relationships, make them much more a matter of course, and create a much more healthy attitude toward them. And that's a much saner way to have them be toward each other, since it takes boys and girls both to keep the world going around sensibly and they need to know each other better.

P. A. M.: No, the medicine you mention will not harm warts, but I don't think it will help them, either.

This power to resist disease is the result of proper nourishment.

When the necessary elements to build this power of resistance are lacking in diet, cod liver oil when given in tablet form as in Father John's Medicine will supply the necessary strength and power to throw off the disease.

That lazy feeling is a warning—

Energy and ambition suffer when you are not "regular." Ex-Lax, the safe, gentle laxative, rids the body of poisonous food wastes and aids the system to return to normal.

Important Note! There's nothing else like Ex-Lax. Its scientific laxative ingredient is made more effective through chelating by the exclusive Ex-Lax process. Ask for Ex-Lax by name and refuse imitations.

Mrs. C. H. Jerome: Thank you so much for sending the aluminum chloride recipe for excessive perspiration. Someone else had also sent it in, but it was good for you to trouble.

Thank you so much, too, for your kind, encouraging words.

Puzzled: Yes, hard as it may be to do, go to the parents of this girl and insist upon change of behavior at once.

You seem to have done everything else anyone could expect you to do.

Wanting to Know: Yes, the only way to "break into print" is to submit manuscripts to various editors your daughter's home in all probability.

However, you would not and should not marry this widow and expect to live in her home and let her take care of you.

Lonesome: But so much of it is your own fault. You do not need to provide as you do for all these grown people.

By all means go and make yourself comfortable away from them. You have already done too much.

Kansas Smiles: Yes, it would be quite correct to ask the boy to come see you now that your mother doesn't object any more.

A. E. H.: Candy spots, being mostly sugar, which is easily soluble in water, can be removed with a little sponge with clear tepid water.

Mrs. R. M. D.: Try kerosene on those many spots on your dog unless they are raw.

Have you tried any of the very good mange remedies on the market?

Puzzled: Stay at home and go to school. You are too young yet to think of marriage and your brothers will mend their ways as they grow older.

Try to make friends with them.

Ruth: You have only to give time a chance. The flabbiness you complain of will not last.

Pat: You are supersensitively making a mountain out of a molehill.

Forget the trivial incident. To refer to it again would seem like a guilty conscience. But let it be a lesson never to toy with things again as you talk, and especially when visiting the sick.

Dear Chaperon: In regard to "D."

I want to know if a hair tonic darkener, I want to say she needs a little brilliantine on her hair when it looks dull and lifeless. I've used the preparation she speaks of, and it has helped. Just a few drops on the hands. Not much.

Also, in regard to the woman who is the mother of about little grandson in her keeping, if she would only forget her mother and see the child as God's child, she could more readily overcome her fears. Perhaps a stranger could take him and see no faults in him except the natural faults of little boys. He is probably no worse than others, but she should not be because she knows about his mother.

Mrs. R. W. W.

Waiting for Advice: Apply a very little liquid vaseline nightly to the scalp with finger-tips and rub in well, massaging the scalp thoroughly.

Wash the hair with pure Castile soap and put juice of one lemon in last rinse water.

This should help the dandruff you complain of.

Gene Gale: At 17 you should weigh about 115, but under no circumstances should you try to reduce if you weigh more than that—unless your physician directs your diet, that is. All is still growing and need all your strength.

Rose geranium leaves are sometimes put on top of glasses of crabapple jelly, but would not do on the bottom of cake.

I am happy that the suggestion for the little one who held his breath is working out well.

Dear Chaperon: Last week there was a request in your page for the prayer given below:

Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me. Bless my little lamb tonight. Through the darkness to Thee near me. Watch my sleep till morning light.

All this day Thy hand has led me. And I thank Thee for Thy care; Thou hast warned me, clothed me, for me. Listen to my evening prayer.

Let my sin be all forgiven. Bless the friends I love so well. Take me, when I die, to heaven. Happy there with Thee to dwell.

Mrs. C. A. A. Sleeth.

Want to Know: If you are able to support a wife, by all means. You are still a comparatively young man and would not be contented in clothes to business college and afterwards when you go to work. Nothing is worse taste than "fussy" clothes in an office.

Dear Chaperon: I have read with interest your answers to problems hard to solve and wish to get your views on the stepmother, her rights and the responsibilities should be shown her by stepchildren.

Win the friendship of the stepchildren first before you do anything else. You will never be able to do this if you show the meddling of others disturb you in the least. Don't let it.

Just face the fact that there will probably be opposition and trouble in that direction and learn to minimize it in your own mind. The only way you can give triumph to that meddling is letting it make a real difference.

Cultivate a tremendous patience and that thing is golden silence. Half the trouble is that the stepchildren have a preconceived notion cautiously, for hostility is usually in the air.

Try leaving the open "mothering" of your stepchildren as much as possible to the father, as it were. But quietly insist on having your home the way you want it to be. Be as considerate as possible, as reasonable as possible, but as firm as a rock about that.
